Project Description

What are the client’s problems?

If you want your proposal to be the winning one, make sure you spend ample time understanding what your client is facing. In this section, clearly explain your total understanding of this client’s problem. Spend extra time on formulating this part, as it may very well decide if the rest of the proposal will be read or not.

How are you going to solve the problem?

If your proposal properly answers this question, then you’re on the right track to writing a winning proposal. Get into the finer details of how you’re going to solve the problem, explain in detail while making sure to keep page counts minimal and realistic. This is also a great section to highlight any knowledge that can set you apart from the competition.

Timeline

How long will it take to finalize the project?

Be as clear as possible and break the project into as many milestones as it makes sense. The big question to answer here is clearly how long will it take to complete the project. Be sure to set out realistic expectations for both parties, even though you might feel tempted to underestimate the timeframe - it’s not a good idea.

Pricing

How much does the client have to pay?

Your pricing scheme is an essential part of any proposal, and it’s probably one of the deciding factors that the client will think about evaluating. Be flexible and try to adjust your pricing based on the client, making it as simple as or complex as the project demands. Some options to choose from are itemized fee summaries, periodic milestones, or hourly rates.

Payment Method

How should the client pay you?

Try to be as concrete as possible in this section and whenever possible, try to be flexible and choose the payment method that works best for both you and your client. Pooled in most cases this obvious choice, but there might be cases where you need to be more flexible, so make sure you do that and avoid overcomplicating the payment process.
