ONNA SOLOMON
Autism Suite

Diagnosis
Statistics shuffle and split each mother’s frantic mornings—
As in to mourn. As in more. Admire. As in mire. Shit smeared in the bathroom, screeching joy at the vent fan’s mechanics.
Take the survey—*I feel sad: Most of the time
Some of the time Never.* How many words does he know? How many words is he saying spontaneously? Each day at the clinic families shocked, embarrassed.
The doctor’s dictation: a significant history delays . . . problems . . . behaviors.
It is my opinion . . . a (mild/moderate/severe) disorder. Studies show. Studies show. The show rewound, reversed, the scene repeated. The repeated scene.
A six-month wait to be seen. We can put you on the cancellation list. Tissue boxes in every room. A battery of assessments.

Theory of Mind
Those I’m not
think
things I don’t think

I know you know
things I don’t think thoughts I don’t

Those I’m not
think things
I don’t think

I know you know things

I don’t think thoughts I don’t Those who are not me
think about things
I don’t think about those things

You don’t think
what I think
You don’t think
I know what I think

Metaphor
The soul is a house:
the whole
what resides within the walls

of one life.
What a life holds,
what it’s built around.

Let me repeat myself:
The soul is a house, the whole of what resides within the walls of one life.

What a life holds, what it’s built around.

Without the house
what does furniture matter?
He can learn to make the bed,

flush the toilet, say “hello”
into the phone,
but if walls are missing
or unsound,

no sure boundaries in which to reside,
who could know
how to invite any of us in?

If the walls of the house
are missing or unsound,
how could he know
to invite any of us in?
Treatment I: Developmental
To wait.
Allow the child to be as he truly is—let him wander, let him flap, let him break the silence with his strange utterances—

There will be time for your own cries, your own wailing—imitate his rocking.
Hum his intolerable hum for him.
Far from purposeless

he moves in continuous response to sensation. Enter the water through which he wades,
brook his gestures that seem
at each turn to reject you.

Definition: Inward (adj.)
In reference to situation or condition.
Situated within. That which is the inmost part; belonging to the inside: turned in,

turned in on himself—
a physical act, turned his back.

Of the voice: uttered so as not to be clearly heard, muffled, indistinct.

Said of the heart as a material organ possessing an interior part—

and so, figuratively, of the heart,
mind, or soul: as feeling and thought’s intrinsic secluded home.
Treatment II: Applied Behavioral Analysis
Say I want cookie please
I want cookie please
Good boy
Touch your nose good boy
Touch your mouth. Your mouth.
Touch your mouth. Good boy.