The Fern

a green glowing feather fell from the sky planted itself quill down sprouted a body more feathers nested in cool earth worms at its beak laid eggs hatched its young not a flock but a luminous glen as we walk we feel their underground song you believe my tale because I’m your father and you with the hand I hold were never conceived