From the Director

As a puppet artist interested in shadow, toy, and table top puppets, I came to this project to explore how these forms might expand upon stories of stereotyping, transformation, and the world of comics. Thankfully, with Howard Craft’s imaginative universe, Lenora Helm’s historic anchoring through music, Serah Ashwell’s rich portraiture, and most importantly JaMeeka Holloway’s thoughtful work to bring both Black joy and authenticity into difficult stories, the show became something more important – an attempt to see and understand how narrow white imaginations limit the possibilities for vibrant futures and do real harm, in the particular case of Winsor McCay, specifically to Black people. This production has come to fruition after four years of development with more than four workshops (I’ve lost count), two public showings, and an immense number of hours worked. The Black, Indigenous, and People of Color working on this production have developed it in spite of the emotional toll it takes to work with the imagery. In an effort to look toward an infinitely more vibrant future, free from the weight of these limiting images, you can dig into some of the resources we have collected below. - Torry Bend

From the Associate Director

It’s common knowledge that like most elements of American history, animation has overwhelmingly been dominated by white men. White men whose imprint on the medium can still be seen and felt with a heavy hand today. White men like Winsor McCay whose genius can’t be undone, but whose legacy and influence must be scrutinized and reckoned with. Over the past couple of years, we’ve witnessed the removals of monuments and statues across the world that memorialize perpetrators of racial brutality who hold questionable, unethical pasts. I’ve stood in support of this movement, but admittedly have not been anywhere near the frontlines of it. However, as an artist, this work feels like my contribution to dismantling America’s affinity for upholding, protecting, overlooking, and lionizing problematic white men. Winsor McCay was a problematic white man. Although his violence may not have been physical or conscious we’d be remiss to negate how the lasting impact of his dehumanizing and stereotypical depictions of People of color, especially Black folks, has inadvertently contributed to the continuation and justification of hostility toward us/them in animation and even beyond. Many may contend with my aligning McCay’s work and that of his peers with violence by arguing “intent” or the “climate of times”, however, no matter how common within the time period - bigotry, misogyny, xenophobia has always been wrong and impact always prevails above intention. And if we’re keeping it real, we all know the intention was never meant to be endearing to those it has aggrieved. It was always intended to assert the supremacy of whiteness above all. - JaMeeka Holloway
A word from us both

The reality of this process is that it has been a challenging one. Challenging in the way that puppetry can always be, but also in the way that this work has pushed us all to confront our own personal relationships to visual culture, cartoons, animation, and telling stories based on a white dominant history. Almost everyone in this project has a story of loving something from childhood only to realize with age that it is racist, misogynistic, xenophobic, etc. These images persist in our memories and become uncomfortably tangled with nostalgia.

Simultaneously, the marginalized artists in this cast can attest to ways they've been injured by that same imagery and we've had to create space in our process for these difficult conversations to take place. We've all had to reflect on if and why this story is relevant now, for you. And we have asked if this is the most appropriate and responsible way to tell this story. We've met some bumps in the road but ultimately are all gathered with you here because we believe in this play's potential to insight important dialogue and meaningful conversation.

We have very deliberately placed charged language and moments that feature racist images with the goal that this work inspires audiences to consider the role animation has played in the perpetuation of white supremacy & the degradation of Black folks and all People of color.

Productive thoughts to engage may be:
_What is your personal relationship to racist caricatures and tropes designed by whiteness and placed without consent on Black and other marginalized bodies?_
_If you’re a non-BIPOC person and you’ve enjoyed and found delight in them, why?_
_Why did Winsor’s one black character only speak gibberish?_
_How has animation shaped and informed your perceptions of blackness, women, and communities of color?_

SeRah Ashwell is a Durham based visual and performance artist. Most recently her visual art has been featured in Torry Bends’ Dreaming (2019, 2021) and will be in Cary Arts Centers’ production of Coming Back For Me in January 2022. SeRah has also had the pleasure of performing in Paperhand Puppet Interventions 2021 Summer Production Unfolding Seeds and Duke Universitys’ production of Citizen in 2020. She is grateful for the opportunities she has been given since moving to Durham and leaving corporate America in 2014. She is also in celebration of her first child, Nikola, with her wife Johanna.

Torry Bend is a puppet artist and scenic designer, her design has been seen at La MaMa and nationally. Bend’s puppetry has appeared at puppet festivals across the country. The Paper Hat Game was a New York Times Critic’s Pick, received the Best Toy Theater award for 2015 at the Puppeteers of America Conference and was nominated for a Drama Desk Award. The production received the 2017 UNIMA Citation of Excellence for the best puppetry in the US. She has received grants from the Mid Atlantic Arts Foundation, Foundation for Contemporary Arts, Henson Foundation, Jerome Foundation and the Minnesota State Arts Board.

Jessica Hudson currently lives and works in NC but spent most of her adult-life in Chicago working as an independent performing artist and as a teaching artist. Jessica's solo work pulls from the vocabularies of dance, performance art and physical theatre. However, she is happiest and most alive in collaboration with others, both on the stage and in the classroom. Jessica shared the stage with such gems as Mucca Pazza, opera-matic, 500Clown, The Chicago Kings and About Face Theatre. Jessica was a teaching artist for over a decade with Chicago Arts Partnerships in Education and Hubbard Street Dance Chicago.

Trevor Johnson is a long-time resident of Durham, NC and a native of New Bern, NC. He was in Everybody, Jump and Leaving Eden with PlayMakers Repertory Company, and has performed in many other regional performances. Trevor has degrees from UNC-CH and NCCU. He is a family man and home inspector (who dabbles in real estate). Trevor enjoys traveling, exploring the outdoors, gardening and cooking.

Josh W. Martin is a professional comprehensive theatre artist working in NC, OH, and MN over the past eight years. He is a recent Theatre, Film/Media, Sociology/Anthro (Peace/Conflict) graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University. Josh currently serves as the Artistic Director of Imperium Theatre Company, NC. He recently became the full time Technical Director at Theatre in the Park, Raleigh. And he is currently funded for venue development research through the National Science Foundation as an iCorp Fellow. Intending to democratize theatre through the development of systems to automate and control unconventional spaces.

María Zurita Ontiveros is a director, puppeteer, writer, and intimacy captain from Mexico City, Mexico. She trained at the National Theater Institute at the Eugene O’Neill Theater Center, the SOGEM Mexican Writers Guild, and the City Academy in London, and she has a B.A. in Theater Studies and History from Duke University. Previous work includes the Duke Theater Studies Mainstage Medea, Duke productions of [title of show] and In The Heights, Tender Age at the 2019 National Playwrights Conference (assistant director), and I Want to Be Naked with the Who Are They Now Theater Collective.
Milissa Orzolek, aka abandoned ships, produces projects large and small that explore ideas of belonging and responsibility. As a writer, director, human geographer, teaching artist, builder and graphic novelist, she fell into the world of puppetry in 2010 through a production of Fantastic Mr. Fox in New Orleans. She has worked on large-scale puppets for Wayne White and Cirque Du Soleil and performed her own work in Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, Detroit, New Orleans, New York and St. Paul. In 2016, abandoned ships received a Family Grant from the Jim Henson Foundation for its original production What Keeps Us.

Brandon Osley is an actor and performer born and raised in Charlotte, NC. They've been performing since they were young and welcome every new experience that the arts have given them. They're very proud to be a part of the process that brought Dreaming to life and couldn’t ask for a better group of artists to dive head first into the world of puppetry with. A dream role for them would to one day be a part of the cast of Hamilton on Broadway as Lafayette/Jefferson, and to also originate a role in a show themselves. See y'all out there!

Beth Payne has been working within the realm of technical theater since 2015, holding multiple job titles throughout. As a Stage Manager, some of her most notable shows have been Snow Queen (Whirligig Stage, 2016), Little Shop of Horrors (Playhouse Wilson, 2016), Into the Woods (Barton College, 2018), and Best Little Whorehouse in Texas (Playhouse Wilson, 2019). She'd like to thank Jaxon and Jeremy for their unwavering love and support through this process.

Ashley Winkfield is multidisciplinary performer based in Brooklyn, NY and Winston-Salem, NC. While earning a degree in Performance Studies from the UNC Chapel Hill, they had the opportunity to work and perform in world-premiere of Basil Twist’s The Rite of Spring. Since then, they have performed with several puppet and theatre companies, including the China tour of Mabou Mines’ Animal Magnetism; Bread Art Collective’s The Great American Casket Company; Torry Bend’s The Paper Hat Game; and Rachael Shane’s The Paper Piece. They currently train with Shannah Rae Vocal Studios and Lucid Body Technique. For more about Ashley, visit www.ashleywinkfield.com.

Brandon Xie is currently a senior at Duke University studying Economics, Computer Science, and Cinematic Arts. Over the past year, he has completed several projects as actor and writer/director, including in short films and feature/TV screenplays. In addition to these endeavors, Xie works as a development intern at a management production company and compiles top movie lists as recommendation resources. Xie’s ultimate goal is to increase Asian-American representation in the entertainment industry and aims to pursue it full-time after graduation.
Jeanette Oi-Suk Yew is an award-winning designer for theater, opera, dance, musical, music performances, installation and immersive experiences. As a designer she aims to create a visual environment that is organically integrated into the landscape and language of the production. Her recent work includes KPOP! with Ars Nova in association with Ma-Yi Theater Company and Woodshed Collective (Henry Hewes Lighting Design Award, 2017 LIT Design Award in performance, Lortel and Drama Desk Nominations), Sweet Land with Yuval Sharon and Cannupa Hanska Luger, Hamlet, Zoetrope, and Octopus’s Garden with Caborca, Gloria: A life with Diane Paulus, Eve Ensler’s Fruit Trilogy (US premiere), and Aziza Barnes’ BLKS with Nataki Garrett (Woolly Mammoth).
