

Frankincense, Sacred, Wild: Oman (Boswellia sacra - Advanced Technology Extracted)

The Boswellia sacra trees grow naturally in Oman and have been used medicinally for thousands of years. (Boswellia sacra and Boswellia carteri are actually the same species but commonly it is agreed that the name Boswellia sacra is for those trees found in Oman.) When the trees are about nine years old, small cuts can be made to tap for resin. As the resin is exuded, it hardens and the tears are collected two or three times a year. Each year a tree will produce an average of one kilogram of resin which can be converted into about two 15ml bottles of pure high-quality essential oil.

Because of the variation in soil and climate, there are many differences in the quality of the resin and therefore the overall therapeutic quality of the essential oil will differ too. The frankincense trees that have had to adapt to harsh environments, like growing out of almost solid rock in the mountains of Oman, produce a superior therapeutic resin and essential oil.

Through numerous hours of research and advances in technology, there have been further discoveries on how to extract even greater healing properties from the Frankincense resin. The Advanced Technology Extraction is a new patent pending distilling process that uses both CO₂ and Hydro Distillation to produce the greatest overall therapeutic Frankincense. To distinguish this oil from the many other Frankincense oils in the market, they call it Sacred Frankincense. Sadly there are suppliers now trying to capitalize on the higher price by calling their oil Sacred Frankincense. So when you purchase Sacred Frankincense oil, make sure you are purchasing the Advanced Technology Extraction.
