Don't Let Your School Fall Victim To Cyber Attacks

Australian educational institutions have become increasingly vulnerable to cybersecurity threats.

Every eight minutes, a cyber attack is reported in Australia.

6.2% of cybercrimes are reported in the education sector.

Due to budgetary constraints, educational institutions are more vulnerable to cyber attacks as they don't have a strong cybersecurity infrastructure. In addition, many students are not aware of common types of cyber threats and can easily fall victim to online scams.

Here's are some of the most common cyber security threats the Australian education sector faces:

Phishing

Ransomware

Data breaches

IoT related attacks

DDoS attacks

Here's why you should consider giving your students and school staff cybersecurity awareness training.

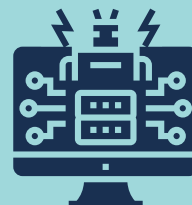

Safety on social media

98% of students of college-age use social media, and cyber security training can help them avoid scams and stay safe on social media.

Technical proficiency

Students will improve their technical proficiency in using computers; this may help them greatly when they join the country's workforce.

Compliance

The school's staff can increase the school's cyber resilience and make the institution more compliant with cyber security regulations.

Eliminate curriculum delays

Cyber attacks could potentially interfere with your institution's curriculum, but these attacks can be prevented by training your staff.
